

I'm not robot!

Root android 7.0 nougat apk.

This last weekend I started testing a new Android app for fun, and ran into some trouble getting Burp Suite working properly. I burned a whole afternoon troubleshooting the issue, and decided to write up what I found out and two different ways I got it working. Background I've done quite a bit of Android testing in the past and my setup usually involves a Genymotion VM or my old rooted Nexus Tablet. I run Burp Suite locally, install the User Cert as outlined in Portswigger's documentation, configure a WiFi proxy and I'm off the races. This particular app I wanted to test, however, required a minimum API level 24 (Android 7.0 - "Nougat") and suddenly it wasn't working. I followed the steps I always do but saw nothing but "connection reset" errors in Burp. After a few frustrating hours of troubleshooting, I finally figured out the issue lied with the latest versions of Android (API >= 24). Before I go any further, all the information I needed was found in these great write-ups: Starting with Nougat, Android changed the default behavior of trusting user installed certificates. It's no longer possible to just install the Burp CA from the sdcard to start intercepting app traffic. Unless otherwise specified, apps will now only trust system level CAs. The failure happens "invisibly" and is responsible for all the alerts I saw in Burp Suite. There's two ways to bypass this, and I'll walk through them both. Install the Burp CA as a system-level CA on the device. My recommendation for the easiest solution, but does require a rooted device. Also added benefit of not having to set a lockscreen PIN :) Modify the manifest and repackage the app. Slightly more work, but doesn't require root privileges. Note: I did all this with Burp Suite Pro on my
